Statement of the Problem:
Both developing and developed countries have recently witnessed a notable increase in the number of aged people due to the technological and scientific progress in all life fields. Consequently, there was a dire necessity for paying more attention to such critical stage, studying its characteristics, requirements and problems by a variety of scientists of different specialties. They should realize that elderly stage is a part of human lives. Man has not yet reached that divine wisdom behind old age. However, there is a must for benefiting from such stage in human life by all the means as elderly stage is a divine bless, particularly if such stage is associated with good deeds. Doubtless, aged people own various life experiences, skills and knowledge formed along years of their lives. Additionally, if such life experiences, skills and knowledge are positively exploited for serving their communities, this category will be considered as a productive one, not as a dependent category always in need of help.
