Abstract:

The paper focus on ligatures which are one of the most typical features of hieratic script through three of the most important sources of hieratic papyri in the Middle Kingdom (The Heqanakht papyri- El-Lahun papyri- The Ramesseum papyri). This paper aims to respond to some questions raised about the hieratic ligature signs, such as did the Ancient Egyptian scribe have reasons and motives that made him choose connected or separate spelling when writing a word?, and was there a standard way to write ligature words rather than others?. It also aims to study the different styles of ligature signs in the Middle Kingdom hieratic papyri. In addition, a catalog is provided of one hundred and ninety ligature signs (Appendix A).
