

البحث رقم (8) في القائمة

Spittle in Ancient Egyptian Religious Texts	عنوان البحث باللغة الانجليزية
اللُّعَاب فِي النُّصُوصِ الدِّينِيَّةِ الْمِصْرِيَّةِ الْقَدِيمَةِ	عنوان البحث باللغة العربية
Rania Abdel Aziz Mahmoud	أسماء المؤلفين
Bulletin of the Center of Papyrological Studies	المجلة
Vol .38 2o21,Pp: 1-2.	العدد وارقام الصفحات

Abstract:

Spittle carried important symbolic reference in Pyramid texts, Coffin texts and the Book of the Dead, where it was related to the gods like the god “Horus” who spat milk from his mouth and spat his Spittle to face his enemy “Seth”. Spittle was also related to the god “Papi” who spat poison on the body. Spittle also participated in treatments from diseases, where spitting on wounds helped them to cure, while spitting on hair locks helped its growth.

Rivers flow with spittle discharging from the mouth to open by this the horizon doors so that the deceased could ascend to heaven.

Spittle was connected to myths like the creation myth, the myth of Horus and Seth, solar myths such as “Re and Apopis”.