

The Nature of Political Parties After 25

January Revolution:

An Analytical Study of the Developmental Discourse

A Thesis submitted to the Faculty of Arts Fayoum University

in Sociology for The Degree of Master

Prepared by

Eslah Abd El-Naser Abd El-rahman Hasan

2015

Form No. (4)

Name of Candidate Eslah Abd El-Naser Abd El-rahman Hasan Degree Master

Title of Thesis The Nature of Political Parties After 25 January Revolution: An Analytical Study of the Developmental Discourse

Supervisors 1- Prof. Shehata Seyam

2- Dr. Abd El-Hamid Zaid

Department Sociology

Branch Political Sociology

Approval

ABSTRACT

This study aims to investigate the causes and factors that contributed to the rush to create a strong social parties after the revolution, Try it and detect the developmental role of political parties after the revolution of January 25, 2011, And taken from the strategies and mechanisms followed to reach the development goals As well as a keen study to try to detect social biases new political parties. that the day after the revolution Also sought to shed light on the extent of the difference between this agreement development programs

The study was used to reach the objectives approach discourse analysis ,Which has been applied to five of the parties (the Liberal Egyptians - construction and development - Egyptian Liberation - the Republican People - the Socialist People's Alliance) That after the revolution, for the detection of the silent in the programs of those parties, The study also used

Fayoum University

Use Other Side if Necessary

the case study method Where has been applied to two of the leaders and cadres of these parties, And then to try to detect the actual practices of the parties under study , it has used the study guide field work tool.

Based on the above findings , the study results for a number of the most important: The weakness of the developmental role of political parties and restricted to the work of courses and seminars, Crossed those parties for new social and political strong old and others practiced political work under the previous regime (Mubarak) regime. Political parties sought to win over the poor and marginalized through development of the issues addressed, As well as the lack of a little difference between those parties in addressing these issues