

effectiveness of the role of civil associations with newly formed families to reduce the problem of early divorce
in Fayoum Governorate

Research Summary:

The problem of early divorce is one of the most family problems that threaten the Egyptian family entity and society, and civil associations are considered one of the most widespread and attached entities to members of society and a sense of its problems, and family care programs are located within the fields of work of most of those associations, so the study came within the evaluation studies to determine the level of effectiveness of the role of civil associations with newly formed families to reduce the problem of early divorce, by applying to some civil associations that work within the scope of research, using the comprehensive social survey of all newly married respondents at the time of the study amounted to (165) respondents, and the results of the research resulted in the weak level of awareness programs for newly formed families of the causes and factors of early divorce, and the study recommends activating the role of civil associations in awareness programs and education of family lifestyles and the causes and factors of early divorce.

Key words: effectiveness, role, civil associations, early divorce.