

The effectiveness of the development model in social group work and developing digital citizenship for university youth

Summary

The current study aimed to verify the effectiveness of the development model in serving the university in developing digital university students. The study is based on experimental implementation through one accredited and controlled group consisting of 30 students from the Faculty of Social Work, Fayoum University. The results of the study concluded that the main hypothesis was correct, which is that there are many statistically significant differences between the results of the pre- and post-measurement of the variable of a digital interpretation of the Trans curriculum using the developmental model in group social work.

The study used a tool (a measure of digital citizenship development among university youth), which was applied before and after to the experimental group.
