In order for development to be achieved in general, it is necessary to pay attention to the disabled, especially the mentally disabled, because they are part of the development of society, as they have the capabilities that the society can benefit from.

The field of care for the disabled is one of the basic areas for practicing the profession of social work in general and the way of serving the individual in particular, which leads to the need to pay attention and benefit from all human resources in the community and support their participation in development efforts. towards integration and work on developing these trends.

Within the limits of the researcher's knowledge and by looking at previous studies, it is clear that most of these studies focused on the role of the social worker in integration schools, the obstacles that faced the specialist, the mother's awareness of the needs of the mentally handicapped, and the attitudes of teachers, administrators, and those in charge of the educational process. The researcher pays attention to this aspect.

The mentally handicapped face many psychological and social problems that cannot be overlooked, and these problems appear as a result of their integration, where the mentally handicapped and their families feel low status, uselessness and importance within their community, and that these problems may affect the attitudes of families of the disabled, which requires the need to identify the nature of these trends.
