Not even in the most advanced countries is the weather forecast as exact as people would like it to be. It may affect many of their life aspects, including their act of traveling from a place to another for any purpose. People would plan according to weather conditions and if they were sure how the weather would be like, they could spare themselves a lot of disappointment. Once a group of friends who rarely met because their work demanded their constant traveling, happened to meet in a town in Italy. They decided to spend a day either on the Alps or at a sea resort. Their choice was to depend on the weather. If it were cold and sunless, they would enjoy sitting at one of the cafeterias that are scattered on the slopes of the Alps. Yet they would prefer to enjoy the pleasures of the warm season beside the sea. As it could rain any time of the year in Italy, they wished they could make sure that the weather would be fine. The weather forecast said that the sun would be all morning and the sea would be calm. In high spirits they met at the sea side and decided to swim when the midday sun made the sea water warmer. When an hour of enjoyment had passed, black clouds gathered in the sky making the sun disappear. Rain fell heavily and the friends had to go back to their town. What broke their hearts was that they were told that the sun was shining all day on the Alps.
