I. Reading Comprehension:

Read the following passage and answer the questions: (12 marks)

Boys are more likely than girls to be “redshirted” by their parents – held out of kindergarten for an additional year of preschool after they reach the age of kindergarten eligibility. If the parents are considering delaying their child’s entry into kindergarten, they should investigate the kindergarten agenda at their local school. Some kindergartens hew to the traditional socialization model, which accommodates children of different maturity levels. Others require a level of academic readiness that the boy may not be ready for. The parents should speak with the teacher to see what they can do to help prepare their child to meet expectations. Finally, they should consider options – if their son delays kindergarten for a year, can they find an affordable pre-kindergarten program that will challenge him?

A. Answer the following questions:
