

Silos in Egypt and Ancient Near East, a comparative study

Journal of Faculty of Arts, Fayoum University, Vol. 17, 2018, pp. 1-29.

The people of the ancient Near East were dependent on silos to store and backup their grain provisions which would serve them at times of need. The idea of storing grain represented an intellectual development in the civilization of the Near East, which led to both the advancement from small silos to big ones and upgrading the silos to take different shaped and sizes.
